The objective of this R21 application is to conduct a randomized controlled study to determine the feasibility and preliminary effectiveness of an innovative intervention to increase the use of evidence-based treatments by children and adolescents with eating disorders. Specifically, the proposed study will (a) establish a peer leadership group (PLG) comprised of parents of children and adolescents with eating disorders; (b) train the PLG members on use of evidence-based treatments, communication skills, motivational strategies, and interpersonal skills; (c) conduct the RCT to determine the feasibility of the proposed peer leader training model and the preliminary effectiveness of the peer leadership intervention; and (d) propose a model for dissemination of the peer leadership intervention. The primary aims of the study are to investigate: (1) the feasibility of establishing a group of parents of children and adolescents with eating disorders as leaders of an intervention to increase access to evidence-based treatments for eating disorders; (2) the preliminary effectiveness of a peer leadership intervention to increase the use of evidence-based treatments for eating disorders; and (3) the preliminary effectiveness of the peer leadership intervention at improving child and adolescent eating disorder outcomes, including treatment adherence, clinical severity, family functioning, and child and adolescent eating disorder symptomatology. A cross-sectional feasibility study will be conducted in three phases. Phase one will recruit 60 parents (30/group) and conduct a descriptive analysis of the group. In phase two, two fathers and two mothers in each group will be trained to function as peer leaders. In phase three, the PLG will be organized as one group, and two sessions will be conducted to introduce them to each other, introduce the intervention, and train the leaders to facilitate six, 3-hour weekly sessions of skills-based cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) for children and adolescents with eating disorders. Next, a randomized controlled trial will be conducted for a 12-week interval with six weeks of treatment condition (peer leadership) and six weeks of control
