No. 7,052,875 discloses a method for determining the amount of a gas in a gas-filled portion of a vessel using one or more electromagnetic fields. In this method, a magnetic field is applied to the gas-filled portion of the vessel, and a magnetically induced electric field in the gas-filled portion of the vessel is measured. The measured electric field is then correlated to the magnetic field and the amount of the gas in the gas-filled portion of the vessel is determined based on the correlation.Spitfire Squadron Sp
